ROBERTS' SPANISH SKETCHES.

COMPREHENDING

MADRID, SEVILLE, GRANADA, CORDOVA, BURGOS, XERES, MALAGA, GIBRALTAR,
CARMONA, &c. &c. &c.

"There is no country in which all the gorgeous pageantry of the Catholic religion is so profoundly and extensively displayed as in Spain; and a large proportion of these Sketches are devoted to its illustration. The Cathedral of Seville especially has furnished the Artist with admirable subjects, of which the most grand and striking are "The High Altar during the Celebration of Mass," and "The North Aisle, with the Procession of the Host;" nor can any thing exceed the beauty of "The Chapel of Ferdinand and Isabella at Granada," or "The Church of San Miguel at Xerez." Continued in style with these is that fine relic of Saracenic architecture—"The Chapel in the Great Mosque at Cordova." Several of these charming drawings have been transferred to Stone by Mr. Roberts himself."—Literary Gazette.

"We need hardly say a work more agreeable to the tourist could not have been produced, whilst to those who have not visited the scenes it must be still more acceptable. Some of the interiors are most vividly touched off."—Athenaeum.

The delicacy, fidelity, and fine effect with which Mr. Roberts has executed these Sketches, heightened as they are by the introduction of the light tints into his Lithography, has so fully conveyed the interest which they are calculated to excite, that they most strongly move every imagination."—Morning Herald.

"This is a selection of drawings on Stone from the admirable Sketches of Mr. Roberts, whose celebrity as a painter of architectural views and interiors is fully sustained by these very beautiful productions of his pencil. The late improvements in Lithography, which give to each impression the appearance of a drawing on tinted paper, touched with white, produces a completeness of effect not formerly attainable, and it is highly gratifying to see the progress made in this very elegant branch of art."—Morning Chronicle.

"This is indeed a work which in every respect, in size and style, in subject and execution, is entitled to lay claim to a character for unsurpassed, if not unequalled splendour. The Sketches are not only very large, but very numerous. How to distinguish the most admirable we do not know. "The High Altar, Seville Cathedral," appears, as we open the ample and well bound book, to be unmatched, yet there are two other views in the Cathedral equally masterly; and "The Interior of the Church of San Miguel" completes the magnificent quartet. Architectural beauty, space, light, power, the grouping of figures, the massive solidity of parts, the harmonious flow of the whole were never seen to greater advantage."—Cont Journal.

"We have seldom seen a more striking collection of Sketches than those now before us. Among them is a sketch of "The High Altar of Seville Cathedral during the Celebration of the Corpus Christi," which exhibits a most impressive display of religious pomp and magnificence. "The Towers of the Alhambra," how many stirring and romantic historical recollections does the word "Alhambra" recall: we see the old Moorish Tower crowning the brow of a steep hill, up which several armed bands are winding, while below are one or two remains of buildings, apparently in the last stage of decay; nothing can be more picturesque than this drawing, which realizes all those eloquent descriptions of the Towers which Washington Irving has given us in his "Tales of the Alhambra."—See.

"Spain, so rich in the picturesque and romantic, is a fertile soil for the painter, who having well nigh exhausted the beauties of Italy and Switzerland, are now leaving the Alps for the Pyrenees.

"Roberts' taste is architectural, of which he is a masterly draughtsman, especially when his view is new, and his range limited; then the structure towers in all its grandeur and influence, impressing the scene with the vastness and magnificence of the reality."—Spectator.
